

Dear Parents,

We hope your kids are getting a kick out of the missions experiences we've been enjoying together. We sure have!

The featured missionaries for this set of Kids on Mission activities are athletes – specifically the women's soccer team of Oklahoma Baptist University. Local publicity about an exhibition game against a Brazilian team in the city of Natal made it possible for the OBU soccer players to speak about Jesus in schools, in churches, at soccer clinics and from door to door. Your child can follow their lead by using his or her interests, talents and favorite activities as a bridge to peers who have no knowledge of God's love. (Check out kidsonmission.org to find photos and videos about the team trip.)

To investigate further, watch or attend a local amateur or professional soccer match. Talk with your child about the worldwide appeal of the game. Discuss how Christians can use love for the sport to share their love for Jesus.

Your family can help support the work of mission teams like the group from OBU. Ask your church or association about upcoming college or youth mission strips. Put the dates of the trip on your family calendar and pray daily for student athletes who are making Jesus known throughout the world.

Thanks for involving your kid in missions!
